Personification means writing about non-human things as if they were people. Think about how the poet uses personification in “Make up your mind, March!” and what she is saying about the month of March.

Reread the title of the poem. What is the poet asking the month of March to do?

___________________________________________________________________________________________________
___________________________________________________________________________________________________
___________________________________________________________________________________________________

Which word in the title shows that the poet thinks that the month of March is acting like a person?

___________________________________________________________________________________________________

What other non-human thing behaves like a person in the poem? (Hint: It’s a friend of March’s.)

___________________________________________________________________________________________________

Find three more words or phrases in the poem that are examples of personification:

1. _______________________________________________________________________________________
2. _______________________________________________________________________________________
3. _______________________________________________________________________________________

In your own words, describe what is happening in the poem.

___________________________________________________________________________________________________
___________________________________________________________________________________________________
___________________________________________________________________________________________________
Write Your Own Poem

Write your own spring poem using personification. Follow the steps below to get started.

Pick a Subject

Choose a non-human springtime thing to write about. For example, you might choose a kite, a mud puddle, or your bicycle.

My poem is about ____________________________________________________________.

Personification

Thinks of two human activities the subject of your poem might do. For example, a kite could dance between the clouds, or a mud puddle could invite you to stomp in it. Write your examples on the lines below:

1. _____________________________________________________________________________
2. _____________________________________________________________________________

Put It All Together

Use your subject and your examples of personification to write your own poem.

_______________________________________________________________________________
_______________________________________________________________________________
_______________________________________________________________________________
_______________________________________________________________________________